Dr. LeRoy:

   Thank you for the opportunity to write about John Perry who is applying for your program. I have known John for close to twenty years, both professionally and personally. During our service together in the United States Army, John displayed a level of maturity, competence, intelligence, and problem solving that were consistently better than all his peers—and many of his superiors, to be truthful. There are very few people that work harder than John, and very few people that are as level-headed as he. John is exceptionally self-aware and easily identifies his weaknesses in order to improve himself and the organization. This is why I have zero doubts whatsoever about his ability to excel once again in an academic environment. During my own graduate degree program several years ago, I quickly learned that much of the work was team-oriented and heavily impacted by the students' abilities to work together. You will find no better team-player than John Perry. I truly wish that I had the same emotional intelligence and agreeable temperament as John because he makes every team better.

   John is not without his flaws or weaknesses, like all of us, but I struggle to find any that would inhibit or preclude his ability to be an asset to your program or prevent him from excelling as a student and teammate. I cannot speak intelligently to John's past academic performance, but I do know that he has demonstrated in his professional career that he is more than capable of producing graduate-level work in writing, analysis, and communication skills. Please consider this letter of recommendation when evaluating his application; I know that John will be an exceptional addition to your program. If I can be of any assistance to you, please do not hesitate to contact me at (910)987-2461 or christopher.g.loschiavo.mil@army.mil.

                    Sincerely,

                    Chris Loschiavo
