To whom it may concern,

I highly recommend Ethan Ross for admission to the Evergreen State College Environmental Studies Graduate Program. During the seven years that I have known Ethan and his family, I have witnessed his growth and development as a young individual to the person he is today. Prior to his post high school career, I had the pleasure to supervise him during his time at a warehouse prior to attending undergrad at Western Washington University. I take my team building very seriously, and Ethan was always able to meet and exceed my standards in the building. I truly believe that Ethan will continue to excel academically and professionally.

Ethan consistently demonstrated exceptional leadership, work ethic, and determination at such a young age. He consistently went above and beyond, taking initiative and delivering high-quality work. His ability to lead and inspire others is outstanding. As a team leader, Ethan effectively guided his team towards common goals, through motivation and encouragement while at the same time being involved no matter how minor a task was.

Ethan consistently sought growth and improvement, exceeding expectations in every project regardless of size. He has demonstrated and shown strong academic potential, grasping complex concepts quickly and achieving top grades from my discussions with him and his parents.

Beyond his academic achievements, Ethan also actively engaged in extracurricular activities. He has summited several mountains in the Pacific Northwest area including Mt. Rainer, competed in athletics, and various volunteering events. His ability to balance academic commitments with extracurricular involvement is a testament to their exceptional time management skills.

In conclusion, Ethan possesses the qualities necessary for success. His leadership, work ethic, determination, and drive set him apart from many others. I am confident he will thrive at Evergreen State College.

Sincerely,

Jakin Fung
